By Wm. H. Dawley, Jr.

Then the artist, a lady somewhat above middle age, said to your correspondent as he approached for a better view: "You may not know that these worshippers are adoring the divine spirit that is supposed to abide in this bull." I may have told her that I thought that he was a prize Hereford bull that attendants were leading to a pond to get a drink after the ribbon had been pinned on him; but I didn't. She continued:

"This and Brook's Pastoral Visit are the most famous in this room." I expressed regret that American Negro life was so conspicuous for its absence in so famous a gallery seeing that it was so full of European peasant scenes. She concurred stating that she was a Georgian, reared by a colored Mammy whom she loved next after her mother, while she deplored one man owning and selling another on her father's plantation, there was happiness and contentment. His children were taught to respect colored people. It was a matter of great concern to her that those happy scenes were not reproduced.

BUT THERE WAS NO SALE FOR THEM. She told of the strivings of the artist Brooke and demonstrated that for its innate fitness, her race was chosen and given from the beginning dominion over the world which it would always hold; that they were descended from the Jews. I ventured to remark that the Jews were slaves to the very people whose daughter's picture she was reproducing before her own ancestors had discarded their garments of skins of wild animals. She exclaimed: "Are you a minister? You may know more about the Scriptures than I. But to say everything would be all right if people did not mix. If they would only stay to themselves and develop from within." "The Japanese," I replied, strenuously tried that but our own Admiral Perry about 60 years ago backed by our government persuaded them somewhat forcibly to give up their hermit-like seclusion and to admit among them western peoples and ideas." She adroitly switched to the Chinese showing that their civilization was older and superior to the Japanese. Seeing that she was friendly disposed to the Negro because of the gathering of a crowd to note the dialogue, your correspondent made no further attempt to correct her history but left this splendid artist with her thoughts and her art.

Our next article will be an interview with the interesting, popular and unique Judge Robt. H. Terrell of the Municipal Court of the D. C.
